

Interdisciplinary Humanities Graduate Group (IHGG)

Interdisciplinary Humanities is an innovative master's and doctoral program that incorporates anthropology, the arts, history, and language and literature. An Interdisciplinary Humanities education may include disciplinary specialization along with training in concepts that enrich all cultural research. The program exposes students to many humanities professions and trains students to engage the public.

THE INTERDISCIPLINARY HUMANITIES GRADUATE GROUP HAS TWO ESTABLISHED CONCENTRATIONS

- › The Multicultural Luso-Hispanic
- › World Transnational Americas Studies

IHGG also has active and emerging research themes that include:

- › Critical Race and Ethnic Studies
- › Community Engaged Scholarship
- › Digital Humanities and Digital World Heritage
- › Performance Studies
- › Women, Gender and Sexuality

Students may pursue these or additional interdisciplinary research fields based on personal interest and faculty expertise.

Finally, IHGG faculty are also experts in a wide range of disciplines in the humanities and allied fields, including:

- › Anthropology
- › Art History and Criticism
- › Geography
- › History
- › Literature and Writing
- › Music

FUNDING OPPORTUNITIES

The IHGG has historically been able to offer funding to all master's and doctoral students in good standing. Each semester, many of our students work as teaching assistants or as research assistants on faculty projects or at the Center for the Humanities. Others receive fellowships that permit them to focus on their studies full time. The Center for the Humanities, UC Merced and the UC system all offer fellowships. Many of our students have received extramural fellowships as well.
